About PianoDisc

Founded in Sacramento, CA by inventors Gary and Kirk Burgett, the PianoDisc company experienced immediate success and popularity with the introduction of their first modern computerized player piano system, the PDS 1000, at the 1988 Summer NAMM trade show in Atlanta, GA. With entrepreneurial spirit, Gary, a gifted piano educator and pianist, and Kirk, a master piano technician and engineer, continued to build the company. PianoDisc quickly became a industry leader in electronic player enhancements for acoustic upright and grand pianos, becoming one of the most successful, innovative and influential companies in the music industry.

In 1996, the Burgett brothers acquired the historic Mason & Hamlin Piano Company in Haverhill, MA, bringing the troubled manufacturer out of bankruptcy and back into a prominent place in the American piano industry. Their desire to contribute to the art of hand-crafted piano making while using the technology attained with PianoDisc led to the development of a new type of action design which used composite materials in place of wood. In 2006 the modern iteration of the Wessell, Nickel, & Gross action company was established, offering revolutionary action parts made of advanced composite materials, designed by piano makers for piano manufacturers, piano rebuilders and technicians.

PianoDisc

Today, PianoDisc headquarters are still in Sacramento, where its home office, technology center, manufacturing and assembly operations are located. PianoDisc opened its European sales distribution and service center in Germany in 1994. Offices with sales, distribution, manufacturing and engineering were opened shortly afterwards in the greater Boston, MA area and China.

All PianoDisc products are designed and manufactured with PianoDisc's stringent requirements and under control of the experienced experts who work at PianoDisc. Take advantage of the many years of experience and knowledge of the PianoDisc team and make your leisure time easier and more pleasant, and your work time more productive and successful as you put your piano to work for you.
